Disability as an identity model is closely related to the social model of disability - yet with a fundamental difference in emphasis - is the identity model (or affirmation model) of disability. This model shares the social model's understanding that the experience of disability is socially constructed, but differs to the extent that it 'claims disability as a positive identity' (Brewer et al ...

Models of Disability: Types and Definitions / Disabled World

This approach can lead policy makers and service managers focussing their work on compensating people with impairments for what is wrong with their bodies. This could be through targeting specific benefits at them or providing segregated services. The medical model can also affect the way people with a disability think about themselves.
