The Acquisition Of Creole Languages

Dany Adone reveals that in the absence of a conventional language model, Creole children acquire language and go beyond the input they receive. This study discusses the role of input, a hotly debated issue in the field of first language acquisition, and provides support for the nativist approach in the debate between nativism and input-based models.

This work is based on an investigation of the language acquisition process, particularly with regard to syntax, among Mauritian children learning to speak Mauritian Creole as their first language. Mauritian Creole, in common with many Creole languages, emerged under extreme conditions and, as an isolated language, Mauritian Creole is typologically different from languages where syntax is predominantly tied to morphology.

The Acquisition of Mauritian Creole (Language Acquisition ...

Like any language, creoles are characterized by a consistent system of grammar, possess large stable vocabularies, and are acquired by children as their native language. These three features distinguish a creole language from a pidgin. Creolistics, or creology, is the study of creole languages and, as such, is a subfield of linguistics.
