The modern theories of inflation are in fact the blend of classical and Keynesian theories of inflation. The classical theory laid emphasis on the role of money, i.e., the price rises in proportion to the supply of money, and ignored the non-monetary factors affecting inflation. While, the Keynesian theory laid emphasis on the non-monetary factors, i.e. aggregate demand in the real terms and ignored the effect of monetary expansion (money supply) on the price level.

In physical cosmology, cosmic inflation, cosmological inflation, or just inflation, is a theory of exponential expansion of space in the early universe. The inflationary epoch lasted from 10<sup>-36</sup> seconds after the conjectured Big Bang singularity to some time between 10<sup>-33</sup> and 10<sup>-32</sup> seconds after the singularity. Following the inflationary period, the universe continued to expand, but at a slower rate.

The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money of 1936 is the last book by the English economist John Maynard Keynes. It created a profound shift in economic thought, giving macroeconomics a central place in economic theory and contributing much of its terminology – the "Keynesian Revolution". It had equally powerful consequences in economic policy, being interpreted as providing theoretical support for government spending in general, and for budgetary deficits, monetary intervention ...
